

Protecting your future

Coverage for a brighter tomorrow

Are you prepared for life events that could affect your savings? If not, consider insurance.

The six most common insurance coverage types based on individual needs:

Life insurance

Life insurance can provide funds (death benefits) to pay expenses upon the death of the insured. Death benefits can be passed on tax free to beneficiaries if properly structured.

Homeowners insurance

Your home may be your most valuable asset, so a homeowner's policy is one of the most important types of insurance to own. Homeowners insurance helps you manage property loss, damage and liability risks.

Long-term care insurance

Healthcare can get expensive fast, especially with impairments requiring long-term care. Long-term care insurance helps the insured determine how and where care is received and offers the dignity to control one's own future.

Liability insurance

While homeowners and auto policies include liability insurance, they only protect you up to a certain limit. Therefore, you may need to insure your assets at higher amounts. Sound risk management should include liability insurance which can protect you from lawsuits that may arise from someone falling in your yard, or your dog biting a guest.

Auto insurance

Most states require auto insurance, the most common type of insurance policy. Make sure you and your passengers are properly covered. An auto policy covers a specific vehicle — you are only insured for cars listed on your policy.

Disability insurance

If you become disabled and cannot work for a period of time, would you be able to continue paying your living expenses? Disability insurance can provide the income you need until you can return to work.
